An increase of more than one hundred times its initial volume has taken place in the testing work of the U. S. Bureau of Standards during the twenty-two years of its existence. During the first fiscal year, that is, up to June 30, 1902, there were completed 1,055 tests of all kinds. During the year just closed about 140,000 tests were conducted by all divisions of the bureau.

Most of these tests were executed for other branches of the government, practically every branch making use of the facilities provided. The bureau acts as the principal testing laboratory of the government in the fields of physical science and engineering, and expenditures amounting to many millions of dollars are dependent on its findings. Its tests, which cover a large part of the supplies purchased by the government, serve to insure that these supplies are of the right degree of excellence and in conformity with the specifications.

Much testing is also done for commercial firms and for individuals, over 40,000 test folders, covering over 600,000 such tests, for which a charge is made, having been issued since the founding of the bureau. The government work is given precedence, however, and in some cases all testing except that for the government has had to be refused because the demand exceeds the facilities for doing the work.

The Curative Workshop for Disabled Workers is a new social agency for human salvage, and is indicative of the increasing range and variety of modern education. It is in New York City, under the direction of the Rehabilitation Institute and General Hospital. It is making producers out of disabled, broken, unemployable men by giving them immediate employment under shop conditions in active industrial work.
